Professional Disclosure Statement

Introduction
This document is provided to inform you of your rights and responsibilities as a client and to answer general questions you may have about your therapeutic treatment. I encourage you to express any concerns or questions you may have at any time.

My Philosophy and Approach to Counseling
Therapy is a collaborative work that considers the life experiences, patterns, relationships, and beliefs that have shaped and currently influence your ways of being in the world. I am committed to identifying and exploring challenges that currently bring you to therapy and the innate strengths and resources that will allow you to make the changes you desire. I am committed to providing a safe and accepting therapeutic environment that facilitates growth, insight, and change. I am trained within a variety of treatment models and will work with you to determine the approach that best fits your needs.

At our initial meeting, we will assess your current needs and concerns to collaboratively decide if we can work together. We will evaluate the results of our work together periodically to determine the need for additional sessions, termination, or an outside referral for further assistance. Ultimately, you must decide to use what you gain from the therapeutic process and incorporate it into your daily life.

I may challenge some assumptions or perceptions as well as propose different ways to view, think or manage situations you present during your session. During the course of therapy, I will use therapeutic approaches based on the problems you present, your choices and feedback as well as my assessment of what may benefit you.

If I initiate terminating therapy with you, it will be because I feel that I am not able to be helpful or a higher level of care is needed. Ending therapy well is important. If you feel ready to terminate counseling, please inform me so that we can have 1-2 wrap-up sessions to discuss recommendations to maintain your progress.

Confidentiality
Whatever you say or do during a counseling session cannot be shared with anyone else without your written permission. The following are typical, but not exhaustive, examples of situations and circumstances under which information may be disclosed without prior consent:

3. Under certain conditions, your written records of your treatment process may be subpoenaed. I may be obliged to surrender them. I may be obliged to report information required in court proceedings or by your EAP or other relevant agencies. 4. In situations of suspected child, spouse, or elder abuse, I must notify medical, legal, or other authorities.

5. You disclose sexual contact with another mental health professional.

6. You directly sign a consent to release your records.

I cannot guarantee confidentiality among participants in therapy, although I will use professional discretion in disclosing communications related to me. Whenever possible, you will be consulted before confidential information is released to a third party.

You are welcome to greet me in public or social settings, but please aware your choice to do so may compromise your confidentiality if other people are present. I do not initiate contact.

Risks and Benefits
Therapy work can vary in duration. Most clients come bi-weekly and occasionally people attend therapy more often. Others may reduce frequency once things improve. Longer sessions are an option for those needing more intensive work for a set period of time, is determined by information provided during intake and agreed upon between client and therapist.

It is not uncommon to experience periods in which you may experience seemingly new challenges and struggles prior to noticing positive growth and progress towards goals. Counseling can improve and upset the equilibrium in any person. Counseling is a personal exploration and may lead to changes in life perspectives and decisions. These changes could be temporarily distressing. You are fee to discontinue therapy at any time. If you are no longer benefiting from our work together, we can discuss alternatives and appropriate referrals to best meet your needs.
